Health Update

Lyme disease is caused by a bacterium that is transmitted to humans by the bite of infected deer ticks. There is no evidence that Lyme disease is transmitted from person to person. Persons who spend time in wooded or grassy areas are at greater risk of disease because of the increased exposure to ticks.

Symptoms may include-

- A large circular rash around or near the site of the tick bite.

Multiple rash sites may also appear.

- Chills/fever
- Headache
- Fatigue
- Stiff neck
- Swollen glands
- Muscle and/or joint pain.

Ticks should be removed by grasping the mouthparts with a tweezer as close as possible to the attachment (skin) site. After removing the tick, the tick site should be thoroughly cleansed. If you see any signs or symptoms or illness, contact a physician.

Prevention

- Wear light colored, long sleeved/pants when in woods or grassy areas.
- Consider using an approved insect repellent. Check with your physician if you have questions or concerns about which product is safest.
- Check after every two to three hours of outdoor activity for ticks on clothing and skin.
- A thorough check of body surfaces for attached ticks should be done daily.
